Dracula's Real Story

Prince Vlad III was born in 1431 and ruled a territory corresponding to today's Romania, on the borderline between two worlds, the Christian world with Hungary, and the Moslem world, with Turkey. Vlad III is more famous under his two well known nicknames: Tepes (the Impaler) and Dracula.

The origin of the latter is not clear. The Latin "draco" gave "drac" in Romanian, which means both "dragon" and "devil". Vlad III's father, Vlad II, was himself nicknamed Dracul because he belonged to the Order of the Dragon ("Societas draconistarum") founded by Emperor Sigismond of Luxembourg in 1408.

As for the son, Draculae or Dracula, would be "the son of the Dragon" or "the son of the Devil". The nickname Dracula strangely also resembles an old Slavic word, "dr'kol'", which means "stake" or "pale". The word Dracula might therefore echo the Romanian "Tepes" (the Impaler) and recall the type of torture that the prince inflicted on his victims most often.

Dracula's sanguinary career and the double meaning of his name have contributed to building his heretical legend.
